Panel Rules for 'Combatant'

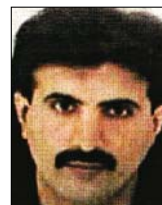

In rebuke, judges reject Bush policy on indefinite detentions

RICHMOND, VA. | A divided panel from a conservative federal appeals court delivered a harsh rebuke to the Bush administration's anti-terrorism strategy Monday, ruling that U.S. residents cannot be locked up indefinitely as "enemy combatants" without being charged.

The three-judge panel of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the government should charge Ali al-Marri, a legal U.S. resident and the only suspected enemy combatant on American soil, or release him from military custody.

The federal Military Commissions Act doesn't strip al-Marri of his constitutional right to challenge his accusers in court, the judges found in Monday's 2-1 decision.

"Put simply, the Constitution does not allow the President to order the military to seize civilians residing within the United States and then detain them indefinitely without criminal process, and this is so even if he calls them 'enemy combatants,'" the court said.

Such detention "would have disastrous consequences for the Constitution — and the country," Judge Diana G. Motz wrote in the majority opinion.

"This is a landmark victory for the rule of law and a defeat for unchecked executive power," al-Marri's lawyer, Jonathan Hafetz, said in a statement. "It affirms the basic constitutional rights of all individuals — citizens and immigrants — in the United States."

The government intends to ask the full 4th Circuit to hear the case, Justice Department spokesman Dean Boyd said.

EXTREMITIES | Digital Dunce An Australian man who lost part of his finger in a bar brawl walked out of the pub and down the street before he noticed it was gone, authorities said Monday. "He didn't know it was missing until he left," police Inspector Mark

Kellert told a Sydney newspaper. "He was out on the street and realized there was blood on his hand, noticed his finger was missing, and went to hospital." Security guards later found the severed finger in the pub's bathroom. (AP) EyeOpeners | Page 2

Guinness Book Files Restraining Order

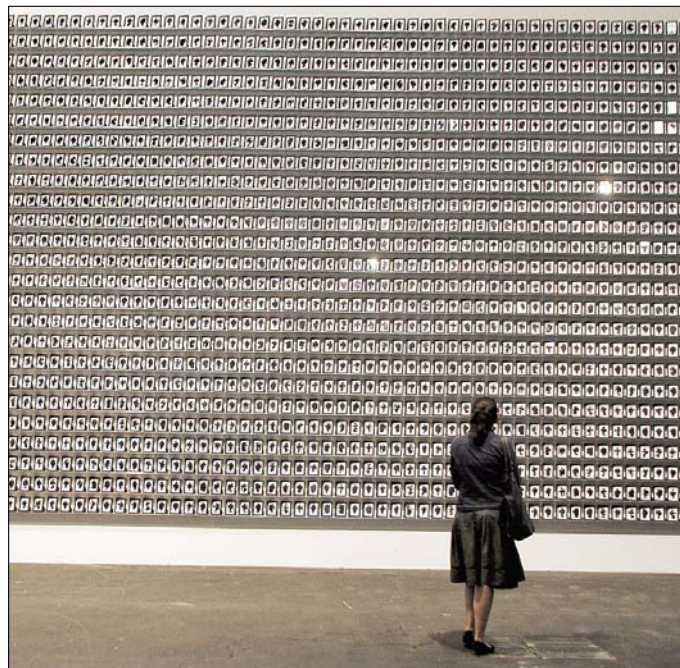

A comedian and magician, who figures he has twisted and tied more than 250,000 balloon animals in his career, is hoping a bright blue poodle will break a Guinness world record. Chris Linn, 31, of Sterling Heights, Mich., filmed an attempt last week to break the speed record for making a balloon dog behind the back. Linn's time: 5.94 seconds; the prior record was 7.47 seconds. Linn tied 1,500 balloon poodles in preparation for an obscure world record. "The key is just being able to contain and control all the bubbles when you're twisting them," he said. Linn made his first balloon dog at age 10. (AP)

Raggedy World Is a Matriarchy

Devotees gathering at a weekend festival in Arcola, Ill., to honor the nation's most iconic rag dolls hope a petition drive will persuade officials to induct Raggedy Andy into the National Toy Hall of Fame. Organizers at the 18th annual Raggedy Ann and Andy Festival said they've already collected at least 10,000 signatures on a petition to add Andy to the institution along side his famous sister. Ann entered the Rochester, N.Y.-based Hall of Fame in 2002. "Ann and Andy are meant to be together," said Tom Wannamaker, who owns the Raggedy Ann and Andy Museum with his wife, Joni. (AP)

Word 'Butt' Still Uproariously Funny!

Iowa police blame a woman named Butts for stealing toilet paper from an Iowa courthouse. "She's facing potentially three years of incarceration for three rolls of toilet paper," Chief Lon Walker said, stifling a laugh as he talked about Suzanne Marie Butts. Workers at the Marshall County Courthouse had noticed toilet paper rolls were disappearing much faster than usual, Walker said. Butts, 38, was caught last week after an employee saw her taking three rolls of two-ply tissue from a storage closet. (AP)

Rebuke of Gonzales Fails Test Vote

GOP senators block measure expressing no confidence in AG

WASHINGTON | Republicans blocked the Senate's no-confidence vote on Attorney General Alberto Gonzales Monday, rejecting a symbolic Democratic effort to prod him from office despite blistering criticism from lawmakers in both parties.

The 53-38 vote to move the resolution to full debate fell seven short of the 60 required. In bringing the matter up, Democrats dared Republicans to vote their true feelings about an attorney general who has alienated even the White House's strongest defenders by bungling the firings of federal prosecutors and claiming not to recall the details.

Republicans did not defend him, but most voted against moving the resolution ahead.

Gonzales

Short of impeachment, Congress has no authority to oust a Cabinet member, but Democrats were trying anew to give him a push. President Bush continued to stand by his long-time friend and legal adviser.

"They can have their votes of no confidence, but it's not going to make the determination about who serves in my government," Bush said.

The attorney general said he was paying no attention to the rhetoric on Capitol Hill.

"I am not focusing on what the Senate is doing," Gonzales said. "I am going to be focusing on what the American people expect of the attorney general of the United States and this great Department of Justice."

One veteran Republican said Gonzales had used up all his political capital in the Senate.

"There is no confidence in the attorney general on this side of the aisle," said Arlen Specter, R-Pa.

Specter voted to move the resolution forward, but he said many of his GOP colleagues would not because they feared political retribution. LAURIE KELLMAN (AP)

Military Jets Collide in Alaska During Training

ANCHORAGE, ALASKA | An F-15 fighter jet crashed Monday after colliding in mid-air with another military jet during a training exercise, Air Force officials said. The other jet landed safely, and no one was seriously injured.

It was not immediately clear why the two jets collided about 90 miles east of Fairbanks in Alaska's interior, said Jennifer Antonna, a spokeswoman at Eielson Air Force Base near Fairbanks. A board of Air Force officers will investigate the crash.

The $27 million F-15C that crashed was from Langley Air Force Base, Va., and the F-16C was from Nellis Air Force Base, Nev. (AP)

Anti-Terror Effort Expands

NYC police using new technology to scan for radiation in vehicles

NEW YORK | Days after New York authorities announced a suspected terrorist plot targeting Kennedy International Airport, police at a checkpoint in downtown Manhattan were confronted with another threat: a grimy, radioactive truck. "We have a mystery vehicle here," Deputy Inspector Hugh O'Rourke observed as his radiation detector cracked.

O'Rourke's concern eased after officers discovered that the truck carried an industrial vacuum used to clean out boilers. Isotopes from soot caused the high reading.

Though the truck was harmless, the inspection illustrates the New York Police Department's fear that the commercial trucks rumbling through the city each day could be instruments of terror. In response, police have stepped up inspections and introduced new technology to thwart possible plots.

"We've always been concerned about the potential for trucks and other vehicles to be used to convey explosives or other weapons," Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly said.

The 36,000-officer department has been developing mobile radiation detectors that can be mounted on cars or bicycles to alert officers to evidence of a "dirty bomb," an explosive designed to contaminate areas with radioactive debris.

Officers on the streets and in the subways also have begun wearing pager-like radiation detectors on their belts. TOM HAYS (AP)

Sentenced Tossed In Teen Sex Case

Judge nullifies 10-year

sex with a fellow teen

ATLANTA | A Georgia judge ordered the release Monday of Genarlow Wilson, who was sentenced to 10 years in prison for consensual oral sex with a 15-year-old girl when he was 17 — a sentence that had been widely criticized as grossly disproportionate to the crime.

Georgia Attorney General Thurbert Baker said Monday afternoon that he had filed notice of appeal, arguing that Georgia law does not give a judge authority to reduce or modify the sentence imposed by the trial court.

The judge's ruling Monday threw out Wilson's 10-year sentence and amended it to misdemeanor aggravated child molestation with a 12-month term, plus credit for time served, and he would not be required to register as a sex offender.

A jury had found Wilson guilty in 2005 of aggravated child molestation for having oral sex with a 15-year-old girl during a 2003 New Year's Eve party. Although the sex act was consensual, it was illegal under Georgia law.

When the judge's order arrived Monday morning, Wilson's lawyers hugged his mother, Juannessa Bennett, who wiped away tears.

"I just feel like a miracle happened," Bennett said. (AP)

Fraud Alleged in Egyptian Election

Police reportedly bar opposition voters from polls; violence kills 1

CAIRO, EGYPT | Lines of police barred opposition voters from some polling stations Monday, and violence erupted between supporters of rival candidates, killing one person and marring the elections for Egypt's upper house of parliament.

The balloting was the latest showdown between the entrenched ruling party and the Muslim Brotherhood, Egypt's most powerful opposition group, which has been the subject of a fierce government crackdown in recent months.

More than 400 Brotherhood members were arrested, police said. The group accused the government of barring many more from polling stations and rigging the vote. The government denied the allegations.

police who blocked the entrance. Police officers at the site said the supporters were not registered to vote, although dozens waved what appeared to be voting cards.

The Muslim Brotherhood stunned the government by scoring large victories in 2005 elections for parliament's lower house, winning more than a fifth of the body's seats to become the largest opposition bloc. Since then, security forces have arrested hundreds of its members, and several of its leaders are on trial in a military court. (AP)

Iraqi Roads Targeted In Attacks

Latest blast comes as lawmakers vote to oust speaker of parliament

BAGHDAD | Suspected al-Qaeda bombers stepped up attacks on key transportation arteries, striking a bridge north of the capital Monday a day after shutting the superhighway south of Baghdad with a huge explosion that collapsed an overpass and killed three U.S. soldiers.

The latest attack, a parked truck bomb, blew apart the bridge that carries traffic over the Diyala River in Baqouba, police said on condition of anonymity. There were no casualties, but motorists and truckers now must use a road that runs through al-Qaeda-controlled territory to reach important nearby cities.

Tumult also arose in Iraq's fragile political structure Monday when lawmakers declared themselves fed up with the parliament speaker and voted to oust the controversial Sunni politician from his powerful post.

Mahmoud al-Mashhadani is a physician who was jailed by Saddam Hussein and who had said from the parliament speaker's chair that those who attack American forces should be treated as heroes.

Palestinian Infighting Leaves 17 Dead

GAZA CITY, GAZA STRIP | Rival gunmen exchanged fire at two Gaza hospitals on Monday and Cabinet ministers fled their weekly meeting after the government headquarters was caught in the crossfire of a brutal day of infighting that killed 17 Palestinians.

The battles came a day after two militants from the rival Hamas and Fatah factions were dragged onto high-rise rooftops and thrown to their death in a power struggle that appears to be rapidly descending into all-out confrontation.

After sundown Monday, gunmen, apparently from Hamas, laid siege to the house of Jamal Abu al-Jediyani, the senior Fatah official in northern Gaza. They then dragged him outside and killed him, security officials said. Medics said he was hit by 45 bullets.

Fatah spokesman Maher Mikdad harshly denounced the killing and threatened revenge.

"What is this, if not a war," he said.

Two other Palestinians were killed in battles late Monday night in northern Gaza, security and hospital officials said. (AP)

N. Korea Opens Door for Rare Tour

Lure of tourism dollars leads secretive nation to OK new hiking trail

INNER DIAMOND MOUNTAIN, NORTH KOREA | North Korea is peeling back its self-imposed veil of isolation, allowing tourists a rare glimpse of the hardscrabble rural life en route to a new hiking trail that opened this month at the South Korean-run Diamond Mountain resort.

The new trail is also aimed at drumming up more business for the tourism venture run by a subsidiary of South Korea's Hyundai conglomerate, which saw a plunge in visitors last year after North Korea's missile and nuclear tests. And drawing more tourists will mean more money for the communist nation's impoverished economy.

The Diamond Mountain tourism project began in 1998 and has drawn 1.5 million guests as the only part of North Korea that can be easily visited by foreign tourists. The mountain is located just north of the border between the two Koreas near the east coast.

It's one of two landmark projects — the other is a joint North-South industrial zone — that are hailed as models for reunification.

The new tour brings visitors to a part of the mountain previously off-limits to outsiders: inner Diamond Mountain, which features waterfalls and Buddhas carved in stone.

But the highlight of the trip is a two-hour drive to get to the trailhead through villages nestled in valleys displaying a panorama of North Korean daily life under leader Kim Jong Il. Crossing through a tunnel to start the journey, a military outpost greets travelers with a slogan proclaiming, "We will fight forever for Kim Jong Il."

Workers at collective farms erect red flags as a sign of devotion to Kim and his late father, founding leader Kim Il Sung. Children play in a schoolyard wearing the red kerchiefs of the youth wing of the ruling Korean Workers' Party.

North Korean guides gush with minutiae about the mountain, but they are hesitant to discuss village life. Taking photos from moving vehicles is banned.

"It's important to create a sense of unity between the two Koreas," Pak Un Ju, a North Korean guide, said of the new tour. "Everybody is entitled to enjoy this mountain, whether South Korean or North Korean." BURT HERMAN (AP)

Groundbreaking African Filmmaker Buried in Senegal

DAKAR, SENEGAL | His body wrapped tightly in a shroud adorned with Quranic verses, the man credited with giving birth to African cinema was buried Monday as hundreds looked on and a continent grieved.

Sembene Ousmane, who died over the weekend at age 84, was a fisherman who taught himself to read and write, a car mechanic, a dock worker, a bricklayer and a union organizer — all before he began write. He penned a half-a-dozen novels before 1966, when he turned one of his short stories into a 60-minute movie, commonly referred to as Africa's first feature-length film.

Like his novels, his films dealt with issues of social justice in Africa.

He also helped create a filmmaking organization that fought the sale of old cinema halls, a trend that has left almost no local venues for seeing African films in Africa. (AP)

O'Malley Diagnosed With Stress Fracture in Shin Bone

Gov. Martin O'Malley has been diagnosed with a stress fracture in his left tibia, an injury related to the running part of his exercise routine. The governor will need to use crutches for the next six weeks. The injury did not keep O'Malley from attending the 20th anniversary of the Patuxent River Wade-In in southern Maryland, where he participated by walking into the water with his crutches. (AP)

Va. Tech Families Demand Voice

Relatives of victims say they feel 'ostracized' by gubernatorial panel

FAIRFAX, VA. | Relatives of the Virginia Tech shooting victims demanded representation Monday on a gubernatorial panel studying the killings, saying in a letter that they feel "ostracized."

They also questioned the status of a memorial fund that has generated millions of dollars to honor the 32 victims of the student gunman.

"We are angry about being ostracized from a government-chartered panel investigating a government-sponsored university, and about how the university has used the names and images of our loved ones to

Gov. Timothy M. Kaine's spokesman said the governor wanted "specialized expertise" when he named the panel, which includes former Secretary of Homeland Security Tom Ridge, psychiatrists, educational specialists and former law enforcement officials.

"Family is important to us. It's also important, I think, to the governor that he have a panel that was viewed as being totally objective and not driven by emotions," said panel Chairman W. Gerald Massengill, a former Virginia State Police superintendent.

Capitol Complex Vows To Clean Up Its Act

WASHINGTON | Congress says it is going to join the war against global warming by cleaning up its own backyard, now cluttered with a coal-burning power plant, a fleet of fuel-inefficient vehicles and old-fashioned lights.

House Speaker Nancy Pelosi has set a goal of making House operations carbon neutral during this session of Congress, meaning the House would remove as much carbon dioxide from the atmosphere as it adds by the end of next year.

"The House must lead by example and it is time for Congress to act on its own carbon footprint," Pelosi said in announcing the initiative that would also shift the House to 100 percent renewable electric power.

Sen. John Kerry has sponsored legislation with the long-term aim of making the entire Capitol complex carbon neutral by 2020.

The Capitol complex now accounts for about 316,000 metric tons of greenhouse gas emissions a year, the same as 57,455 cars.

Boomers Stay on the Job

Longer lives, higher prices mean many will delay retirement

WASHINGTON | As the baby boomers begin to ease into their 60s, most expect to delay retirement longer than their parents or grandparents.

That's good, because many can't afford to stop working anytime soon.

Two new reports portray aging boomers as better educated, with higher incomes and longer life expectancies than previous generations. They also have fewer children and are less likely to be married, leaving them with fewer options if they need help in their old age.

"That one child they had will be very valuable," said William Frey, a demographer at the Brookings Institution, a Washington think tank.

Frey is releasing a report Tuesday that says higher rates of divorce and separation could result in greater financial hardship for aging baby boomers. In 1980, about two-thirds of Americans age 55 to 64 lived in married-couple households. That percentage fell to less than 58 percent in 2005.

There are about 78 million baby boomers, those born from 1946 to 1964. Some will continue working by choice — a government survey shows that most U.S. workers nearing retirement age want to gradually reduce their workload rather than abruptly stop.

Others will have to stay on the job as fewer companies offer health insurance to retirees and an alarming number of private pensions fail.

The National Institute on Aging, a government research agency, is also releasing a compilation of data Tuesday from the national Health and Retirement Study. The data paint a picture of aging baby boomers facing longer, more active lives, coupled with rising costs for health care and other services.

"People are living longer, and the extra years of life, which I think have been one of the crowning achievements of the last century, have to be financed somehow," Richard Suzman of the National Institute of Aging said. (AP)

Blackstone Group Founders To Pocket Millions Off IPO

The chief executive of Blackstone

Group will pocket $449.2 million and hold about 24 percent of the company after it goes public, the private equity firm said in a regulatory filing Monday. Stephen Schwarzman, 60, also received cash payouts worth nearly $400 million last year. Schwarzman founded the Blackstone firm with Peter Peterson, 80, in 1997. Peterson, the senior chairman, will receive $1.88 billion from the public offering and hold about 4 percent of the company. (AP)

Queen of Steamy Lit

Eroticist Zane shuns cultural taboo — and sells a lot of books

FAKE NAME | Zane never intended to surround herself in mystery and intrigue.

The author, whose steamy sex novels set among black professionals have propelled her onto The New York Times list of best sellers, says if she could do it over, she'd have chosen a less provocative pseudonym.

About a decade ago, she was in an America Online chat room and needed to call herself something. She picked Zane because it was the first thing that popped into her head; she's always liked the name.

"If I had known that this was going to actually end up being a writing pseudonym, I would have picked something with a first and last name," Zane says.

Plenty of authors don't use their real names, but there's only one successful writer of black erotica with a gender-neutral, one-syllable nom de plume. It makes people more curious about her — the opposite of Zane's intent.

But don't weep for Zane. After all, as Sean Bentley, the buyer of black fiction for Borders and Waldenbooks, points out, Zane gets a couple of shelves to herself

More than 2.7 million copies of her books are in print, she's a mainstay on the Essence magazine list of best sellers, and two titles, "Afterburn" and the anthology "Love Is Never Painless," were New York Times best sellers.

Not bad for someone who never planned to be a writer. Zane graduated from Howard University with a degree in chemical engineering.

"Whenever I had creative writing assignments in school, the teachers would almost be shocked at what I turned in because it would be so far-fetched and so imaginative," Zane says.

Boredom hit in 1997 when Zane was working as a sales representative. She began writing erotic stories to pass the time after her children went to bed.

Zane's take on sex is hardly revolutionary: It should be safe and pleasurable, and communication is the key to stronger, more satisfying relationships. But her straightforward, conversational prose resonates in the black community, Mackey said.

"It's not openly discussed in most of our homes," Mackey said. "To have an author come out and broach this, even in fiction, is a breakthrough for us."

HE HAS A SENSITIVE SIDE: Manson's latest offering exposes his humanity.

Please Consume Him

Marilyn Manson has a new CD to go with his new (young) lady

CASANOVA | Poor Marilyn Manson: Turns out that underneath all the latex and nihilism, the shock-rock-er just wanted to be loved. And he was, for a while. But when his marriage to burlesque dancer Dita Von Teese fell apart last year, Manson was distraught until a new romance with barely post-jailbait actress Evan Rachel Wood helped lift him out of depression.

He channeled his competing emotions into the songs on his latest, which is perhaps his least intentionally antagonistic album. It's surely no coincidence that "Eat Me, Drink Me" (Interscope) is also among Manson's most compelling records: These songs are taut, anguished sketches as he purges the dysfunction of his broken marriage and warily circles Wood, balancing his attraction with the fear of getting burned again.

Manson plays a massive guitar riff that tears through "Putting Holes in Happiness" while he intones, "You taste like Valentine's, and we cry." "Heart-Shaped Glasses (When the Heart Guides the Hand)" is a jittery dance-punk seduction.

Despite the darkness — and there's plenty on "Eat Me, Drink Me" — Manson for once offers the distant light of redemption. If the "Antichrist Superstar" hasn't abandoned hope, maybe love can conquer all. ERIC R.

Special Report solves the "My home isn't selling" problem

WASHINGTON METRO – A "Special Report" explodes what its author exposes as "The myth of slow home sales." In fact, the Report explains, in clear and plain English, how a home owner who wants to sell can not only count on a sale within 120 days but can be guaranteed that the sale will occur.

The Report proves its accuracy by quoting specific local instances in which the technique it describes has sold homes time after time, quickly, efficiently, and at a favorable price.

The author of the report, noted realtor Frank Sanya, has made numerous appearances on both television and radio.

Mr. Sanya states that the Report represents the compendium of his many years of real estate experience and can be of substantial value to homeowners, especially those whose homes have been on the market unsold for a considerable period of time. The author emphasizes that although he does not accept every listing, by following the Report's procedures he accomplishes a sale in every instance in which he is the broker of record.

The secret, says the Report, is a combination of traits and procedures that consistently result in a successful sale. For a free copy of the Report, go to a private but available Web site – www.WantItSoldNow.com.

THE MORE THE MERRIER: The new Mario Party is designed for the social gamer.

Party Time At Mario's

Wii likes to cut loose with a tiny Italian and a human/mushroom

BIG BASH | It's becoming easy to extoll the virtues of Nintendo's successful Wii console. The system's interactive controls have given many of us good reason to get our butts off the sofa and into some animated flailing with the Wii's remote control.

So it's no surprise that "Mario Party 8" — the first in the "Mario Party" series of frantically short snippets to be released on the Wii — is another great, family friendly excuse to play video games.

Like its predecessors, it's an excellent, whimsical title that's best played with up to four people.

In truth, playing with others is the ONLY way to go. The bigger the audience you can gather around the TV set, the better. "Mario Party 8" delivers what's best described as a board game gone insanely digital.

You can play alone against the computer, but that might be a sign that you've already spent too much time inside and need to go out and make some friends.

You'll get to choose from a cast of characters like Mario or Princess Peach. Then you'll advance through the boards with a series of fast-paced games that will test your "Wiimote" skills, such as banging the controller to hammer nails into a board or moving it in a sawing motion to cut a log.

On a negative note, the graphics in "Mario Party 8" lacked the cartoonish vibrancy and visual polish a brand-new game should have.

The target audience won't mind too much, though, and in reality, this game is all about fast, accurate reflexes and publicly jibing with your pals, not the graphics.

If you're looking for some truly interactive entertainment and can overlook the graphical issues, it's hard to go wrong with "Mario Party 8." MATT SLAGLE (AP)

Neurofibromatosis Studies at the National Institutes of Health

Researchers at the National Institutes of Health (NIH) are conducting studies to explore the growth of skin tumors in patients with neurofibromatosis type 1 (NF1). Investigators wish to learn how fast these tumors grow, how often new tumors appear and what genes are involved in the growth of the tumors. The studies are conducted at the NIH Clinical Center located in Bethesda, Maryland and conveniently located on the Metro Red Line (Medical Center stop).

Parking is provided at no cost.

If you are 20-50 years of age and have or suspect you have NF1, please consider participating today. All study-related tests are provided at no cost.

GENRE JUMPER: Bill Murray has signed up to play the mayor in a new film, "City of Ember." The script is based on the 2003 novel by Jeanne Deprau, and as a futuristic sci-fi fantasy adventure, it promises to be a shift from "Lost in Translation."

The Child Is Gone

Andy vanished years ago, but one playmate won't give up hope

COLD CASE | Filmmaker Melanie Perkins was 9 years old in the summer of 1976, when her friend and would-be sweetheart Andy Puglisi disappeared while on his way home from a public pool in Lawrence, Mass. Twenty-two years later, Perkins returned to her hometown to begin making "Have You Seen Andy?" (7 p.m., Cinemax), a moving film about her friend, a heinous crime and the neighborhood and tight-knit community where she

Along the way, Perkins got the Lawrence police interested in the very cold case and helped focus attention on some shady characters who avoided detection back in 1976.

"Andy" looks at an era before Amber Alerts and nationwide attention to the problem of missing and abducted kids. The boy's single mother was essentially left to her own devices after a five-day search. It also gives viewers a shocking glimpse into an underworld of predators and pedophiles, some who lived and worked within walking distance of the Lawrence pool and the crowded playgrounds where Andy was last seen. KEVIN MCDONOUGH (UNITED FEATURE SYNDICATE)

Healthy Adult Volunteers Needed

HIV is a global epidemic. Currently, 38 million people worldwide are living with HIV/AIDS, a disease that has no cure. In 2005, 4 million people were newly infected with HIV, a rate of more than 11,000 infections each day. Approximately, 10 of every 1000 adults ages 15 to 49 worldwide are HIV infected.

The world is in desperate need of a vaccine for the prevention of HIV infection.

Will you help?

Walter Reed Army Institute of Research and the Henry Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine are currently enrolling volunteers to participate in a study to evaluate the safety of a new investigational HIV vaccine.

If you are a healthy person between the ages of 18-40, are not currently in the US military and available for 12 months, you may be qualified to participate in a study evaluating this vaccine.

This experimental vaccine does not cause HIV infection.

Guthrie Thrives on the Big Stage

Orioles new-found ace dominates in his first month as a starter

ORIOLES | Sometimes, the right guy just falls into your hands.

Pitcher Jeremy Guthrie was constantly the odd man out in Cleveland. He made 16 appearances over the last three years with the Indians before Baltimore picked him up on waivers in the offseason. Then, injuries staff that was third in the American League in earned run average entering this week's three-game series against the Nationals (26-37).

"The last two years, I've felt confident," said Guthrie, who won nine games in Triple-A in 2006 while making nine appearances for Cleveland. In his first season in Baltimore, Guthrie is 3-1 with a 2.70 ERA. He has five no decisions since joining the rotation in early May. That includes a one-run, four-hit performance at RFK Stadium on May 19.

→ The two pitchers the Nationals will face — Cabrera and Trachsel — have five wins each, which is more than anyone on the Nats can brag about. But they both have also struggled with their control at times. Cabrera has allowed 41 walks, second in the Majors, and Trachsel has given up 36 free passes this season.

Guthrie didn't get the decision that night, but the Orioles went on to win 3-2 in 11 innings. Orioles starters gave up just four runs in 19.2 innings during this season's first installment of the Battle of the Beltway, helping the visiting Orioles (29-34) take two out of three.

"[The defense] stays on their toes and the ball gets put in play," Orioles manager Sam Perlozzo said of Guthrie's efficient style, which has produced 30 strikeouts and just six walks since becoming a starter.

O's starter Erik Bedard (4-3, 3.72 ERA) — the Major League leader in strikeouts through Sunday with 103 — was also effective in the first series against Washington. He fanned 12 Nationals hitters but was betrayed by his bullpen in the Orioles' only loss of the weekend.

The Nationals definitely won't see Bedard this week at Camden Yards, and they may not see Guthrie, either (Thursday's starter has not yet been named). However, notorious nibbler Steve Trachsel (5-4, 3.82), who allowed just two runs on four hits in a win over the Nats on May 18, will pitch Wednesday.

He, plus erratic-yet-talented starter Daniel Cabrera (5-6, 4.70) will try to shut down a Nationals team that's scored just three runs or less in three of its last four outings. ERIC BRANDNER

Memory of '05 Looms for the Spurs

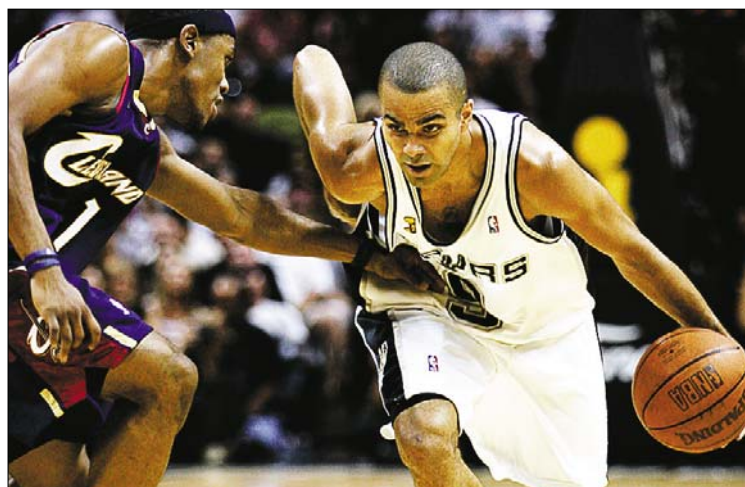

Team needed 7 games to win title after going up 2-0 two years ago

NBA FINALS | The San Antonio Spurs are halfway to a fourth NBA title. In their two victories over the Cleveland Cavaliers, they've looked dominant and composed.

They haven't, however, forgotten 2005. That's when they led the Detroit Pistons 2-0 and looked well on their way to the title but wound up needing seven games to win.

"We need to remember that and learn from our mistakes," said Tony Parker, who led the Spurs with 30 points in their 103-92 Game 2 win Sunday. "I think that's enough to make us get ready."

In 2005, the Spurs won Games 1 and 2 at home with scores of

JEFF HAYNES/AP/GETTY IMAGES

Tony Parker had 30 points in San Antonio's 103-92 win over Cleveland in Game 2.

84-69 and 97-76.

Then they went to Detroit.

The Pistons beat the Spurs 96-79 in Game 3 then blew them out 102-71 in Game 4. The Spurs took Games 5 and 7 to win the crown.

"Hopefully, especially the guys that were in that finals, learn from that and we are more humble going into those games and play a better game," said Manu Ginobili, who called the 2005 turn of events "really embarrassing."

This time, the Spurs will head to Cleveland, where the entire city will be abuzz with the possibility that LeBron James can deliver.

"It'll be a huge challenge," Spurs coach Gregg Popovich said. "They've played well there, and I think they'll feel a lot looser, a lot more aggressive in a lot of ways."

The Spurs are taking pains not to put on airs over their first two wins. But the sizable lead in Game 2 — San Antonio was up by as many as 29 — makes it hard to look humble.

Cleveland was down 0-2 in the Eastern Conference finals this year against Detroit before winning the next four games.

"They played good against Detroit and they came back, so we have to be aware of that," Parker said. ELIZABETH WHITE (AP)

Dumars: Pistons Won't Revamp The Entire Team

NBA | The Detroit Pistons have no plans to fire coach Flip Saunders despite disappointing endings the past two seasons.

"Just because we haven't gotten to the finals, it doesn't mean Flip has done a bad job," Joe Dumars, president of basketball operations, said Monday.

He added that the team doesn't plan drastic changes this offseason.

"We don't have a fire sale going on," Dumars said.

Dumars said his No. 1 priority is re-signing point guard Chauncey Billups when he becomes a free agent next month. He also plans to bring back most of his key players.

Mags Sets Pace at Plate

A healthy Ordonez is leading the Tigers to another great season

BASEBALL | Magglio Ordonez is following up his signature October moment in style.

The outfielder secured his place in the hearts of Detroit fans with his three-run homer against Oakland that lifted the Tigers into their first World Series in 22 years. Now he's trying to get them back to the post-season with a sterling 2007.

Ordenez was leading the majors with a .367 batting average through the weekend. He hit 30 doubles in the Tigers' first 61 games — the fastest player to that mark since 1996.

"He's having an MVP-type season, if you look at his numbers," general manager Dave Dombrowski said. "He's proving that he's one of the best in the game when healthy."

Ordenez's play has led to talk of him being a leading candidate for individual awards, but he's quick to point out the Tigers have 100 games left.

"It's still early," he said. "I need to keep doing what I'm doing right now for the whole year."

The oft-injured Ordonez might have a shot at some of those trophies

Magglio Ordonez has hit 14 homers and has driven in 56 runs so far this season.

SEEING TRIPLE?

It would be tough, but Ordonez has a shot at the triple crown:

- His .367 average was tops in MLB as of Sunday.
- He has hit 14 home runs this season, 10 off the pace of the 24 hit by Alex Rodriguez.
- His 56 RBI are second to Rodriguez, who has hit 63.

if he stays healthy.

Ordenez was scratched from the lineup Sunday because of minor stiffness in his left knee, which was surgically repaired twice in 2004, when he was limited to 52 games with the Chicago White Sox.

Detroit signed Ordonez to a $75 million, five-year deal in 2005 as part of a complicated contract that could pay him as much as $105 million over seven seasons. The Tigers' gamble that Ordonez would be healthy and productive has paid off.

"It was a deal that worked for both parties at the time and has worked out well since," Dombrowski said. "He was comfortable with a contract that would reward him for being healthy and we were comfortable with the deal because it gave us some protection." LARRY LAGE (AP)

WIZARDS | BY MATT SWENSON

Keeping Arenas Is a No-Brainer

THERE ISN'T MUCH to debate when it comes to Gilbert Arenas opting out of his contract next year to explore free agency, as the All-Star point guard said he'll do.

Arenas is a superstar and the Wizards' best player. He should try to get as much money as he can — in this case, more than $100 million.

And because Arenas is Washington's franchise player, the team had better pony up whatever it takes to keep him.

History, though, is not exactly in the Wizards' favor when it comes to free agency. Typically, when one of Washington's stars hits the open market, they sign elsewhere.

Look at Larry Hughes in the NBA Finals with Cleveland as a prime example — even though Hughes' departure opened the door to acquire the superior Caron Butler.

Even when the Wizards' luck

History, though, is not exactly in the Wizards' favor when it comes to free agency.

seemingly changes — such as when Juwan Howard's $101 million contract with Miami was rescinded in 1996 and he returned to the team — it doesn't work out. Howard's talent didn't match his big salary.

Arenas, though, is worth the money. Washington would be lost without him.

He is a quirky superstar on the cusp of genuine greatness — which is when players of his ilk normally leave town.

As long as the Wizards add enough zeroes to Agent Zero's contract, everything should work out fine.

U.S. Open Course Buzz Word: Hard

Toughest course in the U.S. has to be toned down for the pros

GOLF | Vaughn Taylor is back at Oakmont, relieved that it's only the U.S. Open.

There has been widespread talk of gloom and doom in recent weeks, from defending champion Geoff Ogilvy reportedly losing seven balls in his round of 85 to Vijay Singh and a host of others saying they would not be surprised if the winner finished 10 shots over par.

Oakmont is reputed to be the toughest golf course in America, but as it prepares to host its record eighth U.S. Open, there is another part of the mystique that players should keep in mind.

If you think it's tough now, come back in July.

"The members say we don't have to do anything except maybe make it slightly easier," said Mike Davis, the USGA's senior director of rules and competition who sets up the course for the toughest test in golf.

Taylor can attest to that.

He hasn't played in the U.S. Open since 1998, when he was spooked by the narrow fairways and high rough. But he has been to Oakmont twice in the last few years to play a corporate outing, and the greens were unlike any he has played.

"I had two four-putts and three three-putts, and I putted pretty good that day," said Taylor, one of the best on the PGA Tour. "The greens are slower now than they usually are."

On Monday, Tiger Woods started on the back nine and played 18 holes and offered this prognosis: "I broke 100." Phil Mickelson attributed his wrist injury to a marathon practice session trying to chip out of the rough a few weeks ago.

But there have been few complaints. They say it is tough but fair, but they have yet to put pencil to scorecard.

"It is stifling difficult, to the point of walking off and feeling like you've got 12 rounds with Ali," Paul Goydos said. DOUG FERGUSON (AP)

Future in Doubt For College Relic

The 'Blatt is a part of college baseball, but can Omaha keep it?

COLLEGE BASEBALL | To fans who make the trek each June and to those watching at home, Rosenblatt Stadium is synonymous with the College World Series.

The 'Blatt, as locals call it, has hosted the Division I baseball championship since 1950. The event returns this Friday.

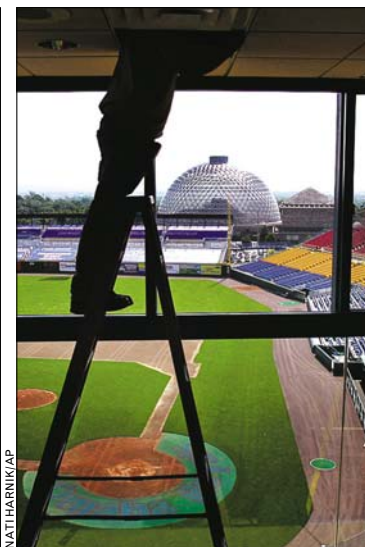

Aficionados hope the tournament never leaves the old-style ballpark. City leaders can't promise it will stay.

The city has submitted two plans to the NCAA that would further entrench the CWS in Omaha. One calls for a new downtown stadium, the other seeks a major renovation of Rosenblatt.

The issue is sure to be bandied this week when the CWS begins its 10- or 11-day run.

"I take great pride in Rosenblatt Stadium. It's the centerpiece of college baseball," said Mississippi State coach Ron Polk, who has coached three different schools to seven CWS appearances since 1973.

Backers of a new stadium say Rosenblatt, built in 1948 and used by the Kansas City Royals' Triple-A team, is definitely outdated. "Ricky" is the word used more often.

Television viewers see a well-manicured playing field, tight-shot cutaways and panoramic views of the stadium.

But fans who visit the park must deal with woeful parking facilities and then navigate a narrow, grungy concourse to their seats.

The city has spent $35 million the last 15 years to upgrade the stadium with new seats, a video board, a sound system and concession stands.

Ever Have Anxiety Attacks?

- Felt your heart racing or pounding for no reason?
- Felt short of breath?
- Started to shake or sweat without warning?
- Felt dizzy or lightheaded?
- Felt afraid you might die?

If these attacks were unexpected and you were afraid of having another one, you may have (or previously had) an anxiety disorder called Panic Disorder. NIMH is seeking volunteers over 18 years old, who are not taking any psychiatric medications, to participate in a brain imaging research study and/or a physiological and genetic research study. The research is trying to better understand the biological systems of Panic Disorder. Participation will include a free physical and mental health assessment.

Compensation available for participation

Are You Feeling Sad or Depressed?

If so, you may be interested in participating in research involving brain imaging at the NIH Clinical Center in Bethesda, MD. The National Institute of Mental Health is interested in understanding what the brain looks like in people who are depressed.

Participants must be:

- Free of other serious medical conditions
- Ages 18 to 55
- Free of head trauma
- Not currently taking psychiatric medications

Transportation reimbursement provided.
Compensation is provided for participation.

Round of Seven

Landmarks

A global ballot will determine the new wonders of the world

The Great Wall, the Colosseum and Machu Picchu are among the leading contenders to be among the new seven wonders of the world as a massive poll enters its final month.

Also in the top 10 are Greece's Acropolis, Mexico's Chichen Itza pyramid, the Eiffel Tower, Easter Island, Brazil's Statue of Christ Redeemer, the Taj Mahal and Jordan's Petra, organizers said.

The Great Pyramids of Giza, the only surviving structures from the original seven wonders of the ancient world, are assured of keeping their status in addition to the new seven after indignant Egyptian officials said it was a disgrace they had to compete for a spot.

The winners will be announced on July 7 in Lisbon, Portugal.

Latin Americans and Asians have been the most enthusiastic voters so far in the final round of 20 candidates, but people from every country in the world have voted by Internet or phone.

"It's the first ever global vote," said Tia B. Vierung, spokeswoman for the "New 7 Wonders of the World" campaign.

PEOPLE'S CHOICE: Machu Picchu may be named one of the world's seven wonders.

The organizers are hoping for a final surge of voting from the United States and Europe to make the selection truly global.

"At the moment, most of the voting is coming from Latin America and Asia," Vierung said. Organizers are confident the campaign will draw more attention in the U.S. and Europe in the final phase.

"Excitement is starting to pick up in the United States" because the campaign is getting much attention worldwide and Americans are starting to realize how positive it is, she said.

"It's so exciting. There are not many things that could bring the world together like global culture."

Rome's Colosseum, China's Great Wall, Peru's Machu Picchu, India's

Taj Mahal and Jordan's Petra have been among the leaders since January, while the Acropolis and the Statue of Christ Redeemer made their way up from the middle of the field to the top level, according to latest tallies. The United States' Statue of Liberty and Australia's Sydney Opera House are sitting in the bottom 10.

The ancient city of Petra in southwestern Jordan — popularized by "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" and famous for its water tunnels and stone structures carved in the rock — jumped from the middle of the pack to the top seven in January thanks to campaigning by the Jordanian royal family and thousands of Jordanians voting by text message, Vierung said.

Choosing world wonders has been a fascination over the centuries. The United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, or UNESCO, constantly updates its list of World Heritage Sites, which now totals 830 places.

"It's so exciting," said Vierung. "There are not many things that could bring the world together like global culture. ... This is really something that every single person in the world can be interested in."

Snow Falls in Sin City

Travel

Outlandish spas are popping up at resorts all across Las Vegas

Some people come to Las Vegas to enjoy the clear skies and warm days. But at a new spa that opened at Caesars Palace, there is a treatment room where it snows all year long.

Welcome to Qua's Arctic Ice Room, where "snow" gently descends from a domed ceiling through mint-infused air chilled to 55 degrees.

The Romans enjoyed cooling down after a hot soak, and spa operators say such rapid cooling of the body has proven health benefits.

Or it may just give you the goosebumps.

"Even coming from somewhere that had a horrible winter, it was still very enjoyable," said Angela Wagner, a 35-year-old physician

"People want to be adventurous. They want something new and different. ... Something they can't do at home."

SANDY ZANELLA, MGM MIRAGE

from northern Indiana. "I had been in the heat wrap and the sauna and the whirlpools. So after being in the warmer treatments, it just felt really good."

The blue pebble and mosaic tile-encrusted cold room at Qua Baths and Spa is just the latest feature in a booming Las Vegas spa industry. While casinos don't offer up their results, nationwide, spa revenue has been growing by about 18 percent a year since 2003 and was worth nearly $10 billion two years ago, according to the latest numbers from the International Spa Association.

In all, Las Vegas has more

than 30 spas, which offer everything from "watsu" floating massages, banana leaf wraps and crystal body art to Indian head rubs, hot rock treatments and Thai yoga therapy. The Ritz-Carlton Spa at Lake Las Vegas just outside of town even offers an array of treatments for men that include beer samples while receiving a pedicure.

Every major resort on the Strip has a spa facility, each touting a special feature or unique therapy, often from Asia or Europe, for relief from the excitement of gambling, relaxation after a big business trip or to prepare for a night on the town.

"People want to be adventurous," said Sandy Zanello, spokeswoman for MGM Mirage Inc., whose Spa Bellagio offers the only "watsu" treatment on the Strip. "They want something new and different. ... Something they can't get at home."

Qua's ice room, the only one of its kind in the United States, comes from the millennia-old European bathing tradition of using snow to cleanse the body, said Don Genders, a partner of Eurospa Technologies LLC, the room's creator.

And the snow at Qua? Like so much of Las Vegas, it's fake.

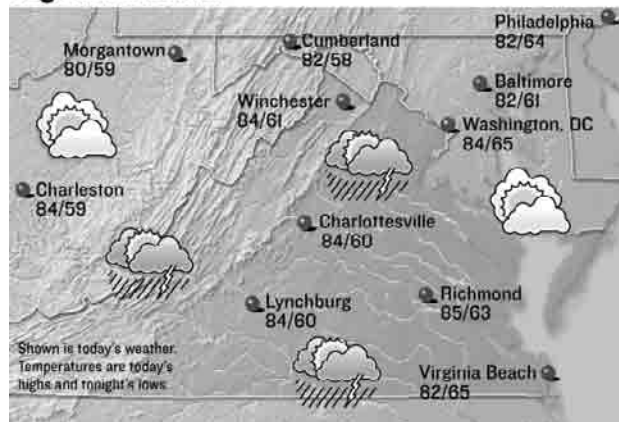

Chris McQuade, a 24-year-old researcher from Clearwater, Fla., said the not-so-cold cold room at Qua was "refreshing, but it wasn't invigorating." He also partook of an herbal steam, drank green tea, read newspapers and watched ESPN.

"The [fake] snow was kitschy," he said. "But overall, it was a lot of fun." RYAN NAKASHIMA (AP)

Dashing Daddy

Got a polished papa? Give him accessories that suit his style

(1) While you may not be able to buy your dad the Ducati of his dreams, the Italian racing powerhouse has teamed up with Tumi to create this smart and sporty messenger bag, ideal for any active dad on the go. With a magnetic flap closure and plethora of pockets, this compact carryall is the practical gift he's secretly hoping for. ($150, Saks Fifth Avenue, Tysons Galleria; 703-761-0700) (2) Help Daddy update his wardrobe with the conservative but still swanky plaid print button-down by 4 You. It's just the right thing to rock when he's going for that dress to impress look. ($63, Alex Boutique, 1919 Pennsylvania Ave. NW; 202-296-2610) (3) For the patriarch with exquisite taste, a crisp lightweight jacket is the way to go to make him feel really special. The summer trench is a favorite of celeb father like Brad Pitt and Jude Law, and this terrifically tailored coat will undoubtedly make an exceptional fashion statement. ($540, Reiss, 1254 Wisconsin Ave. NW; 202-944-8565) (4) This Father's Day, give your dad something to brag about. Mixing function and fashion, this Tempo watch by Robert Tateossian is a timeless gift he'll cherish for many years to come, especially thanks to the tough stainless-steel body. Plus, what gent doesn't love decorating his wrist with cutting edge gear? ($325, alpha-man.com) (5) If your papa is like any other breathing male this summer, he's caught Spider-Man fever. These edgy yet elegant cufflinks, the latest from London jeweler Robert Tateossian, have arachnids mounted on Montana blue crystal to create a beautiful backlit effect, which sure beats a Peter Parker action figure. ($150, alpha-man.com) (6) Pops still keeping his business cards together with a paper clip? Perhaps it's time to upgrade to this chic Kenneth Cole card holster. The two-piece construction is so slick it slides open like a cigar holder, which is sure to awe his co-workers. ($30, Kenneth Cole, Tysons Corner Center; 703-821-7606) ASHLEY JOY PARKER

Father's Day

Day of the Dad

Father's Day is right around the corner, and a gift for your darling dad is in order. And while investing in a gift of various grooming products may seem easy, steer clear of LUSH'S OVERHAUL ($49, lush.com), a new assortment of handmade products for the average guy. The set — which includes six items such as Ambrosia shaving cream, Wicky Magic Muscles massage bar and Tramp shower gel — smells like a stale, stagnant mix of Axe, Red Zone and (oddly enough) peppermint, and this is not a good thing. Beauty

Makeup or Superhero?

Like Lady M's bloodstained hands, like that tattooed wedding ring, like Marion Barry, Tarte's new LOCK & ROLL EYESHADOW DUO ($28, Sephora) Just Won't. Go. Away. Two tubes contain two types of eyeshadows each. The liquid goes on with a lip-brushesque applicator, the powder with a rollerball. Both colors (a bronze and a sage green) are nearly impervious to heat and sweat. The liquid is a more dramatic look, while the powder is subtle; together they form one powerful supershadow. Michael Wilbon

Washington Post columnist MICHAEL WILBON was online Monday to take questions about the NBA Finals, the French Open and Gilbert Arenas.

Do you think Mike Brown is second guessing himself for keeping LeBron on the bench the whole first quarter?

If he isn't, he ought to be. You can't leave LeBron on the bench for the final 9:55 of the first quarter. This isn't the NCAA Tournament. He's

ALL THEY'VE GOT. I like Mike Brown as a coach a lot more than most; I think he has yet to receive the credit deserved for making them the kind of defensive team they are. But leaving LeBron on the bench for nearly 10 minutes was a bad move.

Is Gilbert Arenas really a max-contract player? He's a good offensive player, but he doesn't play much D and he needs the ball in his hands an awful lot. I don't see him in the same class as D.Wade, LeBron, Kobe, etc. You make the important point that management will have to consider as this season goes along. There are a ton of max players who aren't franchise players, just guys paid like franchise players. The Wizards have to decide whether Gil is a franchise player, or a terrific player who needs lots of help. He's not LeBron or Kobe ... but can he be Chauncey Billups?

Did you get a chance to see any of the French Open men's final? Didn't it look like Federer's body language said that he was resigned to losing the match?

I don't know about body language. I just know that Nadal KNOWS he's going to waste Federer on clay.

Horoscope

By Stella Wilder

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Once you begin to tell your story, you'll have your audience in the palm of your hand. Don't take others for granted at this time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You have what someone else dearly craves at this time, and you may have to work hard to protect what you feel is rightfully yours.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) You won't have to wait long before someone with a lot of clout stands up in defense of your plans and ideas.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Take care of business one step at a time. You usually try to consolidate your efforts, but resist doubling up.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) Travel is sure to be more difficult than usual — but not because you failed to plan as carefully as possible. Some things are unavoidable.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) You can learn a thing or two by staying on the sidelines and watching others play the game. You'll be called to action very soon.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) You are beginning a period of increased activity and involvement that will demand the utmost in pacing, timing and self-preservation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You may wake to find that the time is ripe for a dramatic change of sorts — and that you're in the mood to do something truly surprising.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) Environmental influences may make it more difficult than usual to begin your routine. Allow for more travel time; expect the unexpected.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) You're ready to take on more responsibility at this time, but someone in authority may feel you need just a little more seasoning first.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) One set of plans may have to be put on a back burner for an unspecified amount of time, while immediate practical matters are addressed.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Tell it like it is; there's no reason for you to invent any aspect of the story, or exaggerate in any way. Truth is stranger than fiction.

I READ THE LETTER about the new Samurai Sudoku being too small for print ("New Sudoku Too Small," June 11), and I think that's ridiculous. It may be because I don't need to make little kindergarten notes throughout the puzzle in order to finish it. I like the fact that Express has placed it in a section where it is easy to find, plus it's next to the regular daily Sudoku, which is awesome.

STRATEGY Translation: We're Selling Out to Make Some Money

A new STEPHEN KING thriller will be published in its entirety in the July issue of Esquire. "The Gingerbread Girl," a 23-page novella, will arrive at newsstands Tuesday. "Over the last year, we've been trying to breathe life back into magazine fiction," Esquire Editor-in-Chief David Granger said Monday in a statement. "The best way to do that is to publish nothing other than event fiction—stories that have something in addition to their literary merit to call attention to themselves." (AP)

The novella was actually written by a computer simulation of Stephen King.

ASK BETSY

About Student Loans

This column, contributed by American Student Assistance®, a non-profit that provides student loan borrowers with the education and encouragement they need to successfully manage their debt, is published in the Express each month. You can "ask Betsy" questions about applying for student loans, repaying your loans, or what to do if you're having trouble paying your loans back. E-mail your questions to askbetsydc@amsa.com.

Making a Large Payment

Dear Betsy,
I am graduating next month and have started to receive information about my almost $50,000 student loan debt in the mail. My grandparents give all of their grandchildren $5,000 once they receive their diploma and I would like to apply mine to my loans. How will my student loan company apply the money to my balance? Can I tell them that I want all of it to be applied towards the principal? Will my monthly payment be lower if I do? Thank you for your advice.

Sincerely,
Glenn

Dear Glenn,
If your loans are subsidized (your lender can tell you if you're not sure), and you send the payment in while you're in school or in your grace period, all the money should be applied to the principal. If they are not subsidized, the lender is required to first pay off any interest that has accrued on the loans before applying the remainder to the principal. Once you go into repayment, you can request that the remaining loan balance be re-calculated to give you a lower monthly payment—or leave it alone, which will result in a quicker pay-off. If you send the money in after you enter repayment, the lender will pay off any interest that has accrued up to that day, and then apply the rest (which will most likely be the majority) of the payment to your principal.

Let me know if you have further questions on this.

Regards,
Betsy

Called to Iraq

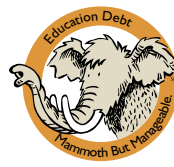

Dear Betsy,
My daughter is in the reserves and was called to active duty at the end of January to participate in our current conflict with Iraq. I thought she had taken care of her finances before she left but I've recently been receiving delinquency notices from her student loan company. I'm sure there's no way she can talk to them from where she is — is there anything I can do other than pay the loan?

Thank you,
Mary

Dear Mary,
The Department of Education has issued student loan administrators guidance on how to handle this very situation. You should be able to call your daughter's loan holder, tell them who you are, and let them know what her current status is. Once they receive this information, they should be able to put your daughter's loan on hold for the next several months or until she returns from active duty. If it should be longer than 12 months, the loan holder will again begin contacting you looking for documentation verifying her military status so they can keep the loan on hold. If you have copies of her military orders handy, you may want to try to get that worked out with them now.

Let me know if you have any problems with this, or have any further questions.

Good luck and best wishes for your daughter,
Betsy

GOT ISSUES? DR. ANDREA BONIOR WILL HELP YOU SORT THEM OUT

My Husband's Been Possessed by a Slob

Q My husband takes awful care of his health. He's taken up smoking again after quitting two years ago. He doesn't exercise much and eats fast food multiple times a day. He has high cholesterol and blood pressure, but he does nothing. I've threatened him and tried to make him see that his slovenliness and laziness will kill him. —ANNOYED IN VA.

Really? When I'm threatened and called a slob, I usually shape right up!

Your husband probably feels a lot worse than you think. And the more miserable he is, the less hope he'll have that he can break this cycle. Now is not the time to knock him down — get out your spackle, because you need to build him up.

As his wife, there are ways you can help at home. Go to the supermarket together for healthful lunches and snack foods. Try to get him to take walks with you or, better yet, help him find some activity he'd be willing to try for just a few minutes at a time (anything from ballroom dancing to sparring with a Ryan Seacrest dummy). Encourage him to cut back to one cigarette per day and aid him in identifying something he can do with his hands and mouth as a substitute. (Gum? A rubber band around the wrist?)

Most importantly, tell your husband you're coming from a place of love. He's probably too overwhelmed to imagine revamping his whole lifestyle, and that's exactly why you need to start small, and by his side. There might be a major stressor in his life responsible for this backslide, and you've got to try to draw him out about that, as well — something you can do as comrade, but not as drill sergeant.

Q Lately I've been very jealous of my co-worker's success. We used to be good-enough friends, and I trusted her, but now I'm wondering if she's willing to stomp on others to get ahead. Though we're still sugary-sweet to each other, something has changed inside me. Am I just jealous?

—WORKING WOMAN

As any spurned 8th-grader can tell you, jealousy and lack of trust are fuel to each other's fires. If your coworker's sugary-sweet facade was the real deal (and perhaps gave way to a yummy Bavarian cream filling), then this might just be a case of green-with-envy disease.

It seems more telling, however, that you have suspicions that she's not on the up-and-up. This means more than just jealousy; perhaps you're also smarting from the sting of betrayal — making reveling in her success a very unlikely prospect. Try to get some space and focus on your own goals, to help yourself cool off, and also to get a little further away from the possible line of fire.

IF CARE PACKAGES stuffed with sweets don't ever make it to the cabin, how is a child supposed to survive sleepaway camp? Kids with allergies (and their bunk-mates) get a raw deal if they're banned from anything with peanuts, tree nuts, milk and eggs—unless they command their parents to ship them supplies from Divvies (divvies.com). Running Rules For Every Body

SKINNY NINNIES with endless legs aren't the only joggers out there. "Running for Mortals" ($15, Rodale) by John Bingham and Jenny Hadfield preaches the gospel that anyone can be a runner. Bingham, a columnist for Runner's World, didn't get his start until he was 43; on his first outing, he only managed a quarter-mile. They guide readers through the basics of picking shoes, planning workouts and making sure not to overdo it.

Pleasure From Pressure

THE EGYPTIAN PYRAMIDS are wonders of the world. Dr. Stacey Smith's similarly shaped tool, the Trigger Triangle ($20, triggertriangle.com), isn't quite as awe-inspiring. But the set of two slightly squishy objects (one big and one small) can be shoved into various pressure points around the body to relieve pain and work out the kinks. Cher and Tina Turner are reportedly fans, but you could probably do just as well poking yourself with a large eraser.

To Go: Stir It In, Sip It Up

IF YOU'VE EVER wondered, "Why can't my laxative supplement taste like a Vitamin Water?" you need to take a swig of Metamucil's new "Berry Burst!" flavor ($13, CVS). (Yes, the exclamation point is part of the name.) The sweet unidentifiable mixture of fruit taste comes from artificial flavors, and it's sugar-free thanks to the wonders of aspartame. And with its dose of psyllium husk fiber, you'll stay as regular as ever.

Eating Like a Disc Jockey

YOUR HUMAN DIET PALS AREN'T helping you stay strong with their constant moaning about Ben & Jerry's. So find new friends, like Portion Pals ($18, portionpal.com). The translucent discs quietly inform you how big your slab of chicken, meat or fish should be, how much a side you can shovel on your plate and how to cut your allotted dessert.

It's a cute idea, and as cutting boards, they're ideal for handling an individual serving. But they're too simple for their own good. The flat squares don't take thickness into account, nor do they seem to care about the exact content of the food. Is there skin on that chicken? If I'm eating brown rice, do I really only get a teeny scoop? And what about dairy and vegetables? Trying to cut a bagel (a whole wheat one!) down to size on a circle that resembled its inner hole proved so frustrating, I just ate the entire thing.

Mall Moves

Q I'm training with a co-worker to walk a marathon, and we do long walks on the weekends around Washington but are at a loss for where to go when it's raining. Do you have any ideas? —ALEXIS

Where do all good red-blooded Americans go when it's raining? The movies or the mall. But while your local cineplex probably has a pesky $10 cover charge (and way too many seats to trip over in the dark), you can hit the halls of malls for free. It's a wonder of our consumer culture.

I've trekked the various levels of Westfield Shoppingtown Montgomery (a.k.a. Montgomery Mall) with Suburban Hospital's Stepping Out club, and can assure you that it's possible to loop by Nordstrom, L'Occitane, the Piercing Pagoda and the food court for hours.

Formal walking clubs tend to meet super early on weekday mornings, before the stores open; you'll have a very different experience on a weekend. But dodging gaggles of teenage girls might raise your heart rate, and any shopping bags you pick up along the way can help you incorporate some upper-body action into your walking workout.

And downtown in D.C., you can take advantage of the Mall — it may be a grassy uncovered space, but the museums around it are happily climate controlled. Dash between buildings, keep up the pace and take in some culture at the same time. And no cheating — skip the moving walkways between the buildings of the National Gallery. That'll definitely get your pedometer working.

Vicky Hallett is one of the MisFits, the fitness team for The Washington Post's Health section. Tri and Tri Again

What athletes need to do to become Ironmen

A 1.2-mile swim, followed by a 56-mile bike ride and a 13.1-mile run sounds like what an action hero would do to escape evil captors. But more than 1,600 people — with no bad guys in pursuit — willingly hopped into Cambridge, Md.'s Choptank River on Sunday for the Eagleman triathlon.

"I get bored and I need to do something new because it's a challenge," explains D.C. Tri Club member Cory Churches, 38, who did her first Eagleman last year. A challenge it certainly is — along with a bit crazy, as the distance is twice that of an Olympic triathlon. A lot of the folks who do it also compete at the next level: The Ironman, twice the length of the Eagleman.

When Churches' fellow D.C. Tri member Sean Ward, 36, first got into triathlons, he was a marathon runner looking to scale back. That didn't quite work out, as he's now done five Ironmans — which end, of course, with full marathons. His training requires two hour-long workouts a day Monday through Friday, seven hours on Saturday and four on Sunday. Even so, it's hard to feel prepared. No matter how many times he's launched himself into the water, the inevitable kicking and punching of his fellow swimmers remains awful.

"If you do an Ironman, it's going to hurt no matter what. You cannot be averse to pain and suffering," Ward says. "But when it's over, it feels good." (Especially when you post a good time — he finished Sunday's race in 4:29.)

CRYSTAL CITY IS ON A ROLL

■ Looking for a place to get your body up to speed for a triathlon? Crystal City doesn't want you to forget about it as a prime fitness destination, full of biking and running trails. So its Business Improvement District is launching Crystal FIT this Saturday with Crystal Rides, a new bike race featuring amateurs and pros spinning their wheels all over the Arlington neighborhood. The action kicks off at 8 a.m. with the amateur races on Crystal Drive, then moves over to 23rd Street for a celebrity trike race — featuring such luminaries as the mascots for the Capitals and the Wizards, local meteorologists, Arlington County board members and a "famous female impersonator" on 15-inch pink tricycles. Then it's back over to Crystal Drive to see what the pros can do. Look out for more events later in the summer, including closed-off roads for in-line skating.

If such a feat sounds impossible, think about this: Rob Sokol, 36, another D.C. Tri Club member, did the Eagleman on Sunday in preparation for his first Ironman later this year. But when he first got into the sport, he was basically clueless: "I never ran track. I didn't know how to swim. I used breaststroke because

"If you do an Ironman, it's going to hurt no matter what you do."

I didn't know you could swim free-style that far. And I rode a mountain bike." (To ace a triathlon, you need a road model.)

Today, Sokol is as savvy as they come. He's hired an online coach and he exercises 11 times a week. He thinks constantly about his nutrition, and is now acquainted with a formerly unheard of ritual called "breakfast." Although the physical aspect is challenging, there are plenty of side benefits. He sleeps better and doesn't feel stressed — how could work seem daunting when he's in for a full day of bodily torture?

The promise of improved health lures many a triathlete. Former swimmer Paul Contino, 26, figured tri training would get him back into shape, and boy, did it. After a year, he's now planning his first Ironman. "I slimmed down and got my muscle back, and it made me want to eat better because I'm a lot more in tune with my body," he says.

Contino's schedule calls for 15 hours or more a week of running, swimming and biking — tricky for most to pull off. But Churches says she trains four to 12 hours per week for the Eagleman, which is much more doable for folks who don't want to think of exercise as a part-time job.

Just ask Adrian Fenty, who was also seen in Cambridge over the weekend. The athletic D.C. mayor completed his first half-Ironman (in an impressive 5:08), and like so many of his competitors, he wants to push himself more. "I'd love to do a full, but I don't know how I'll squeeze in the training," he says. Given that his schedule already calls for eight workouts a week, that dream may have to wait a while. Is It Working Out?

Seven signs that you're sweating successfully

Few things in life provide instant gratification. But you can add exercise to that A-list if you know what to look for.

These seven signs mean you're well on your way to incinerating fat and maximizing your strength and endurance. It may take a few weeks before you sport spandex at the gym, but it's possible to know within 24 hours of a workout if you're exercising smart. Just look for these telltale clues.

1 You feel like Rocky.

No, you're not slurring your words (that would be a bad sign) — you simply feel strong. What used to be a 30-minute treadmill death march now whizzes by, and you can do a pullup for the first time since, well, ever. Rate your level of "perceived exertion" — how challenging the workout feels — using a scale of 1 to 10, where 10 means you don't have enough breath to hold a conversation, suggests Bill Sonnemaker, C.S.C.S., director of strength and conditioning at Catalyst Fitness in Kennesaw, Ga. If you're training properly, that number should go down every few weeks. When you dip below a 5, it's time to up the intensity.

2 You're positively on fire.

Burning sensations during a bikini wax: bad. Burning sensations while weight training: good. "A burning [feeling] in the muscle lets you know you're challenging the body's threshold," Sonnemaker says. Technically speaking, it means the body isn't producing the amount of oxygen the muscles need for energy. You should feel your muscle fibers heating up during the last third of your reps or run (and during speed bursts). If you're lifting with little exertion, add more weight. If you're running or cycling, add 1- to 2-minute sprints every 3 to 5 minutes.

3 Your heart recovers fast.

"As your fitness improves, your heart increases its stroke volume — the amount of blood that's ejected from the heart each beat," says Dayna Davidson, an exercise physiologist in Tampa, Fla. "When the heart doesn't have to pump as often, you notice a decrease in your heart rate." A simple formula for gauging progress: Take your pulse both before and after your workout. Your heart rate should return to its pre-workout rate within 5 minutes. If it takes longer to drop, scale back your workout. If recovery takes less than 2 minutes, you're just being lazy.

4 You're an addict.

Exercise is the most effective over-the-counter happy pill available. "Physical activity increases the neurotransmitters that are used by your neurons to communicate with each other and can influence your mood and your response to stress," says Dr. Shawn Arent, C.S.C.S., assistant professor of exercise science at Rutgers University.

You'll most likely notice the "high" minutes after moderate-intensity exercise like resistance training. After a more demanding workout, it will come later because the body's first priority is recovery. If you don't feel the euphoric effect, it means either you should go harder or you're doing too many back-to-back high-intensity days. Overtraining can lead to moodiness, Arent says. So don't overdo it.

5 You want to get busy.

Next time the slothful (but charming) man in your life says the gym is a rip-off, explain this: Exercise turns you on. Recently, University of Texas researchers had 35 women cycle vigorously for 20 minutes and then watch an X-rated film. On a separate occasion, the women watched the film without working out. Researchers calculated the women's sexual response by measuring genital blood flow and discovered that it was 169 percent higher after exercising. Exercise boosts blood flow down there, heightening arousal. The friskiness will last at least 20 minutes post-workout, so get home fast.

6 You've got insta-guns.

There's a reason models do pushups before photo shoots — it makes them look more chiseled. When you lift a dumbbell, your muscles contract and put pressure on the blood vessels, temporarily impeding the normal flow of oxygen and blood to the muscles. When you're done, backed-up blood rushes in and pumps you up. The effect lasts about half an hour. If you don't notice growth, you may not be targeting the muscle properly. Have your form checked. If all's well, up your weights.

7 You don't raid the fridge.

If you're hungry after what was supposed to be a high-intensity workout, you took it too easy. The workout-induced appetite lull occurs because the area of the brain that regulates hunger decreases when you're hot. Exercise also stimulates the secretion of a hormone that suppresses hunger. Although you shouldn't feel hungry for 1 to 2 hours after a butt-kicking workout, you should try to eat a snack, such as a handful of trail mix, within 20 minutes to speed recovery and prevent yourself from diving headfirst into a bag of Doritos when the effect wears off. YES PAIN, NO GAIN

■ A little discomfort is okay, but if you feel a sharp pain anywhere, stop what you're doing and consult a doctor, says exercise physiologist Dayna Davidson. Delayed-onset muscle soreness is normal 24 to 72 hours after a new or especially challenging workout — but acute pain during or immediately after any workout isn't. To prevent injury, follow this list to make sure you're feeling your exercise in all the right places. If not, consult a certified trainer who can help you tweak your form.

Here Comes the Sun

Baking and basking are bad, but you can brave the rays wisely

Except when eating a tasty vindaloo, burning sensations are never a good thing. And when it comes from basking too long on a beach blanket or ditching your hat during that three-hour softball game, you could be causing a heck of a lot more damage than an unsightly tan line.

A trusty bottle of SPF 30 is still your best weapon in the battle against the sun's wrinkle and cancer-causing rays, but you can do more, says Cheryl M. Burgess, Assistant Clinical Professor of Dermatology at George Washington University Hospital and Georgetown University Hospital and Medical Director of the Center for Dermatology and Dermatologic Surgery.

Protection starts with smarts. So forget whatever your cousin told you about the importance of a base tan. Hopping under the lights of a tanning bed before hitting the beach only subjects your skin to more damage. Nor does a fake-bake-in-a-bottle offer any protection. "That's just a dye that attaches to the skin cells to give you that honey glow," Burgess says. Unless there's sunscreen in them, you can burn as if you didn't apply it at all.

What if you're one of those lucky souls who can't burn? Unless you're a superhero, think again, says Burgess. "If your skin gets darker because of the sun, you've burned," she says. The dark-complected aren't off the hook, even if you never turn red. If your skin is lighter beneath your sleeves, you're busted.

A morning smear of sunscreen is right on, but reapply when you head out for lunch — the most dangerous hours are between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. Do it again before happy hour — sunscreen generally lasts only two hours before you sweat or rub it off. "Even out of peak hours, those rays are still penetrating," Burgess says.

Long drives require extra protection, too. If you're planning on getting behind the wheel, pay close attention to dousing your left side in sunblock, and think about asking an auto-repair shop to put UV shields in your car windows. Same goes for windows in your home or office.

Many foundations and lipsticks these days come with SPF heft, and Burgess also recommends mineral makeups. With flakes of silver, gold and other substances, it reflects the light away from your skin. "It looks very natural," she says — although it's harder to pull off if you're a dude.

And you've heard of SPF, but what about EPF? "Environmental protection factor" is a rating used for antioxidants, explains Burgess. All of those miracle foods you're supposed to eat a lot of — like green tea, vitamin C and vitamin E — also may have benefits for the face when applied topically.

Idebenone might not sound as familiar, but it tops the EPF scale, which is why certain creams employ it to add to their sun-shielding powers. "The process of oxidation, which makes us age, occurs on a daily basis. But this can trap and grab free radicals, so it goes beyond sunscreen," says Burgess, who likes Prevenge by Elizabeth Arden.

Pledging allegiance to a healthy skin regimen now is lovely, but don't forget about checking for any damage you let slide before. A dermatologist can give you a once-over, but between visits, know what to look out for. With moles, worry if any look asymmetric, develop an irregular border, turn multiple colors or grow bigger than a pencil eraser. Rough patches might be squamous cell carcinomas or actinic keratosis. (Don't worry, you don't need to know how to pronounce them.) "They're like running your hand against sandpaper," Burgess describes. And while the majority are harmless, you don't want to be in the unlucky 10 percent who let suspicious patches develop into skin cancer.

Freckles, however, aren't going to bite. Keep a close watch on areas speckled with the brown spots, though. "It's a telltale sign that this may be where something else develops because it's been exposed. It's a clue to where patients need to be monitoring more," Burgess says.

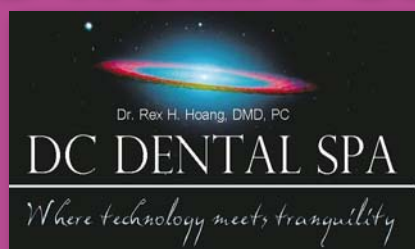

Bet you're not going to forget that baseball hat next time, huh?

The Spray

← One major pro of aerosol sunblocks like Aveeno's: They're easy to apply swiftly to unwilling sunscreen wearers, like wriggly children. We still ended up rubbing the stuff in, though, as it formed weird little droplets on our arm hairs. TMI? Deal with it. ($10, drugstores)

The Gel

→ Putting rubbing alcohol on your skin is cooling. Which is why Neutrogena's Fresh Cooling Sunblock Gel is cooling—the main inactive ingredient is ethyl alcohol. It evaporates pleasantly fast, leaving a thin film of sunscreen behind. Not recommended for paper cuts. ($10, drugstores)

The Wipe

→ Oh come on, MD Skincare. Can't you just say "packet" instead of "packette"? We'll give these wipes a pass for that bit of pretentiousness, because they're easy to carry and don't reek of perfume and/or coconut. A bit pricey, though. ($42 for 60, Ulta and Sephora)

Madsen is on a mission to spread information about Botox safety

Wrinkly foreheads are an endangered species in Hollywood, but most stars deny that their youthful appearances come from anything other than expensive creams and perfect genes.

Virginia Madsen's rare candor — yep, she's used Botox for years — has gotten her a new off-screen gig: Spokeswoman for the "Keep the Wisdom, Lose the Lines" campaign. It's sponsored by Allergan, the maker of Botox (an injectable line reducer for the forehead) and Juvederm (a facial filler).

when my doctor suggested it, I was horrified. I had the dilemma that I didn't want my forehead to be frozen. I'm an actress — I want my eyes to crinkle. But I did research online. The first dermatologist I went to scared me. But I met other people, and I settled on a husband and wife who suggested conservative use of the product. I wasn't going to let them come at me with a needle until they answered all of my questions.

That helped with the headaches? And had an aesthetic effect too?

Yes, I lost the 11 between my eyebrows. I liked that.

But a lot of people in Hollywood don't look good after Botox. Why?
I've gotten invited to Botox parties. One was at a hair salon. Why would anyone let some Doctor Feelgood inject them with something? I talked my friend out of going. Go to a doctor's office and get this done in a medical environment. The frozen look is the exception, not the rule. I don't like the message that women shouldn't have expression.

How often do you get it done?

Twice a year. Mine lasts a long time now because your muscles forget how to frown. But I have to remember to do it before I need it or the headaches return.

Does it hurt?

You're getting an injection, so it depends on your pain tolerance. I'm a real baby when it comes to pain, so I use a numbing cream.

What else do you do to look good?

The main thing is that I exercise. Sweating opens your pores and keeps you younger-looking. I don't need to look like I'm 25, but I want to look like me. So I don't smoke — and I love smoking. I just can't do it anymore. And I exfoliate.

Have you always been concerned about your skin?

I was never one of these people who lays in the sun in baby oil. My parents were fanatics about sun-tan lotion and it really protected my skin.

You've also used Juvederm, right?

I started when the quotation marks around my mouth turned into parentheses. It's a sugar-based product we have in our bodies that I'm simply replacing. I never wanted to do anything else, but we'll see. Whatever it is, it has to be subtle. A lot of women have these cookie-cutter faces, and I think if I suddenly looked altered like that, I'd ruin my career. VICKY HALLETT (EXPRESS)

Alternative Fuel Sources

If diet alone is not keeping you energized, can supplements help?

Pharmacies are stocked with bottles of supplements and herbal pills whose labels claim they'll keep you going and going.

For some straight answers, we asked nutrition experts which supplements help fight energy drain and which ones simply drain your wallet.

GINSENG

WHAT IS IT? An herb that's supposed to make insulin more efficient at converting sugar in the blood into fuel

SHOULD YOU TAKE IT? Only in small doses. Researchers at the University of Connecticut reviewed the results of nine studies on ginseng usage and found that in doses of 200 mg or less, ginseng does enhance mood and energy levels. Higher doses, however, were no better for people than lower ones.

GUARANA

WHAT IS IT? An herb that's a natural source of caffeine

SHOULD YOU TAKE IT? You can, but beverages that contain caffeine are cheaper. "Most guarana supplements provide a boost in energy similar to what you'd get from drinking a Pepsi," says Dr. James Duke, author of "The Green Pharmacy." However, the spike is temporary and you can build up a tolerance.

L-GLUTAMINE

WHAT IS IT? A molecule your body stores in the bloodstream and converts into glucose as needed

SHOULD YOU TAKE IT? No. "Glutamine

can be useful in preventing alcohol cravings and boosting immunity, but there's no research to show that it can help increase energy levels," says Dr. Alan Gaby, a medical nutritionist

L-CARNITINE

WHAT IS IT? An amino acid that helps move fat cells through the body so they can be burned as energy SHOULD YOU TAKE IT? Yes. Your body's demand for the substance may exceed its natural production. "A carnitine deficiency could definitely lower your energy level," says Dr. John Beard, a professor of nutritional science. Take between 250 and 500 mg a day.

NADH

WHAT IS IT? A molecule your body uses to make new cells

SHOULD YOU TAKE IT? It might help. German researchers found that people who took 20 mg of NADH after a long flight were more energetic and scored higher on memory tests than those who did not. And Georgetown researchers found that more than 80 percent of people with chronic fatigue syndrome reported feeling more energetic after using NADH for 18 months. Surprise Carnivores With Soy

■ TOFU RANCHERO

SERVES: 4

INGREDIENTS: 14-ounce package extra-firm tofu; 2 teaspoons extra-virgin olive oil; 2 cups frozen chopped spinach (bagged variety, not the frozen blocks); 15½-ounce can black beans, drained and rinsed; 1½ cups sliced button mushrooms (about 4 ounces); 1 cup fresh or frozen corn kernels; 1½ cups prepared picante sauce; 8 corn tortillas, warmed (optional)

MAKING IT: Drain and rinse the tofu, then pat dry. Slice the block crosswise into eight ½-inch-thick slabs. Crumble each slice and set aside.

In a large nonstick skillet, heat the oil over high heat. Add tofu in a single layer. Cook, without stirring, until the pieces begin to turn golden brown on the bottom, about 5 minutes.

Gently stir, then continue cooking, stirring occasionally, until all sides are golden brown and a bit crisp, another 5 to 7 minutes.

Add the spinach, beans, mushrooms and corn, then saute until the vegetables are just cooked, another 5 to 7 minutes. Stir in the picante sauce and cook, stirring often, until heated through. If desired, serve with warm corn tortillas. (AP)

Don't Pause Pills

A vacation from meds may not be a good idea

If you're taking an antidepressant, chances are you've gone off your meds a few times. But new research shows that's no way to beat the blues.

The next time you're powering your way through spin class, take a look at the 30 other women sweating around you. Five of them have taken antidepressants at some point in the past year. Statistics show that a whopping 60 percent of people who begin popping one of these pills on Memorial Day will have given up by Labor Day. But new research shows that an on-again, off-again relationship with antidepressants can have far more repercussions than anyone realized.

Blues Clues

If you're on medication, you've probably skipped a random Saturday or tried life sans Lexapro for a week, just to see if you could thrive without the drug. "Everybody does it either a little or a lot," says psychiatrist Eve Wood, author of "10 Steps to Take Charge of Your Emotional Life." "Because everybody would rather not be on medication, and, understandably, no one likes the idea of being on drugs for the rest of their life."

I Can't Quit You

No one can predict what life will look and feel like once you stop the pills. Take Caleigh Wright (not her real name), 27, who began taking Prozac in college. A few years ago, she decided to experience life unmedicated. When she quit, though, her symptoms returned. She returned to the drug within weeks, then repeated this scenario a few more times, hoping each time her depression would be gone. "I've finally just come to accept that I have these wonky brain molecules that need help," she says.

Stop Signs

OK, but it also doesn't make any sense to take a drug you no longer need. The latest guidelines for stopping go like this: The first time you're diagnosed with clinical depression, stay on antidepressants for 6 to 9 months. When you begin to wonder if it's time to be drug free, ask yourself: Have my moods — and life — been stable for a few months? Have I made concrete, positive changes? When you can answer yes to both, talk to your M.D. about quitting. Once you have the green light, you'll taper off your meds for a couple of weeks to several months.

Next, create a checklist of very specific depressive symptoms that you've suffered in the past. Be prepared to discuss a return to antidepressants if these symptoms linger for more than a few days. Finally, enlist a close friend as your emotional watchdog.

"I've finally just come to accept that I have these wonky brain molecules."

Walk the Talk

Whether this is your first or third time battling the big D, you don't need to rely on pharmaceuticals alone. New research shows that combining antidepressants with cognitive behavioral therapy (CBT) can have a near-Kryptonite effect on the black dog. CBT is a short-term (just 16 to 20 sessions), no-nonsense approach to therapy with a straightforward goal: to help people unlearn depressive ways of thinking. A recent 3-year study found that among 700 people who were chronically depressed, 85 percent improved significantly — or saw their depression disappear altogether — after just 12 weeks of an SSRI plus CBT. We feel better already. SHELLEY LEVITT (REPRINTED WITH PERMISSION FROM WOMEN'S HEALTH MAGAZINE © RODALE INC.)

WHAT YOU COULD HAVE BUT PROBABLY DON'T

Do you have chronic burning pain, especially in your arms, hands or legs? Are the areas that hurt also ultra-sensitive to high and low temperatures? Do they sweat a lot, or feel hot to the touch? YOU MAY HAVE COMPLEX REGIONAL PAIN SYNDROME, aka reflex sympathetic dystrophy, aka "that thing Paula Abdul has." The disorder usually starts out with a hand or foot injury. The nervous system overreacts, producing pain out of proportion to the original damage. Paula, who wasn't accurately diagnosed for 25 years, says her CRPS began with a cheerleading injury at the age of 17. Not a symptom, however? Acting deranged on national television.

Your Sis, Your Sanity

■ Maybe she did steal your favorite Garbage Pail Kid 20 years ago, but it's time to let go of the grudge. According to a report in the American Journal of Psychiatry, men who didn't have close relationships with siblings were more likely to be depressed by age 50. The 68-year study found just one other predictor of depression: Family history. It's unclear whether the lack of family bonding is an early sign of depression or a contributing factor, however.

Money for Nothing

■ Teens apparently aren't spending all their extra pocket money on video games and designer jeans. In the UK, at least, they're opting for liquor. British researchers studied more than 10,000 15- and 16-year-olds and found that those who got the most cash from their parents (more than $20 per week) were the most likely to booze it up in tacky public spaces like street corners. So cut back on the allowance and invest in wine to serve with dinner — kids who drank with mom and dad are less likely to binge.

Did We ... Uh ... ?

■ If there's one thing in life that's worth being awake for, it's sex. So feel very sorry for those afflicted with "sleepsex," which is like sleepwalking, but with, you know, sex instead of walking. In the June issue of Sleep, researchers offered a classification system for this behavior, describing cases like a 28-year-old woman whose "nightly moaning and fondling" disturbed her family's sleep.
